

Top 5 ways to encourage your graduating students to copy their Adobe assets.

We know that soon-to-be graduates are very busy, so we've made it easy for them to continue creating after graduation.

Adobe now offers a new way for your recent graduates to migrate Adobe files from a school-assigned account to a new or existing personal Adobe account.

With just a few clicks, students will be able to have ongoing access to their assets. By copying their files created at school to their Adobe personal account, they'll be able to showcase their work to future employers long after graduation.

Before graduating:

Before students leave campus and lose access to their institution-provided accounts, they can go to the following web page to copy their files: graduation.adobe.com

Here are some best practices to help your students use Student File Transfer from Adobe:

1. Email your students

Use this email template to let your students know about Student File Transfer from Adobe. You can also include a notice in school email communications detailing graduation preparations.

2. Post on internal web pages

Students often go to internal IT resource web pages with their questions before contacting your support team. Be sure you have the Student File Transfer instructions and links on your webpages, optimized for search, so students can easily find them.

3. Post on social platforms

Students may check social media more often than email, so it's a good idea to include file transfer information on your school social accounts.

4. Notify classes and student clubs

If there are any classes or student clubs that use Adobe Creative Cloud, it's a great idea to let them know the next steps if they want to maintain access to their assets after graduation.

5. Add a notification in your learning management system

If your LMS offers a channel for reaching students, you can let students know about the Student File Transfer service to ensure they make copies of their files before leaving school.
